When it comes to video poker or online poke, we can trace its history back to the 1970s. A man by the name of Si Redd came up with an idea for a video poker game, while he was working as a distributor for Bally. The company was heavily focused on the new pokie market and was not willing to invest in another, untested game. Si Redd convinced Bally to allow him to take the patent with him, which they agreed to, and he had soon made a deal with Fortune Coin Company. Initial uptake of the video poker games was slow, but by the early 1980s, they were some of the most popular games in casinos. It wasn't until 1994 that we saw video poker make the transition to online casinos, spawning countless new versions of online video poker.
